

the company to lay the track and to run cars on the line conceded. The Government is the debtor and the company is the creditor. Then a dispute arises between the Government and the company as to extent of the line conceded. The company contends that the concession extends to the centre of the town B. The Government contends that it extends only to the limits of the town B. If the question is doubtful, that is to say if there is no evidence to show whether the concession extends to the centre or to the limits of the town B, the doubt must be construed in favour of the debtor, viz. in favour of the Government.

23. — Whenever interest is to be paid, and the rate is not fixed by the contract or by law, it shall be 7½% per year.

TITLE IV. RULES FOR THE CONSTRUCTION OF DOCUMENTS.

24. — Whenever the meaning of a document is doubtful the Court shall look at the real intention rather than at the literal meaning of the words or expressions.

25. — Whenever two or more provisions of a document are inconsistent or repugnant and the Court cannot ascertain the real intention, the last provision shall govern.

the company to lay the track and to run cars on the line conceded. The Government is the debtor and the company is the creditor. Then a dispute arises between the Government and the company as to extent of the line conceded. The company contends that the concession extends to the centre of the town B. The Government contends that it extends only to the limits of the town B. If the question is doubtful, that is to say if there is no evidence to show whether the concession extends to the centre or to the limits of the town B, the doubt must be construed in favour of the debtor, viz. in favour of the Government.

23.—Whenever interest is to be paid, and the rate is not fixed by the contract or by law, it shall be 7½% per year.

TITLE IV.

RULES FOR THE CONSTRUCTION OF DOCUMENTS.

24.—Whenever the meaning of a document is doubtful the Court shall look at the real intention rather than at the literal meaning of the words or expressions.

25.—Whenever two or more provisions of a document are inconsistent or repugnant and the Court cannot ascertain the real intention, the last provision shall govern.