

the rules for "Grant of Unoccupied land" provided by the Land Laws.

G. 927. S. 658, 662.

41. — The ownership of fish or game is vested in the person on whose land such fish or game is living.

The ownership of fish or game which pass from the land of one person to the land of another person without any fraud of the latter devolves on him.

The ownership of fish or game caught by a person or on his behalf in compliance with law, custom or agreement, devolves on such person.

F. 564. G. 960. S. 700.

42. — The ownership of a lost thing does not devolve on the finder. He is bound to inform the owner or the loser of such thing, or to deliver it within three days to a police officer or to any other competent official.

The finder is entitled to claim reimbursement of all reasonable expenses incurred by him for the detection of the loser and for the upkeep of the thing, and to avail himself thereanent of the preferential right for preservation of property described in the Book on Obligations.

If the finder has incurred damages therefrom, he can claim compensation and retain the thing until such compensation is paid to him.

Siam : Dika No. 9/123.

F. Circ. 3 August. 1825. G. 965, 970. I. 715, 717. S. 700, 720. Civil Code, Obligations, s. 324.

the rules for "Grant of Unoccupied land" provided by the Land Laws.

G. 927. S. 658, 662.

41.—The ownership of fish or game is vested in the person on whose land such fish or game is living.

The ownership of fish or game which pass from the land of one person to the land of another person without any fraud of the latter devolves on him.

The ownership of fish or game caught by a person or on his behalf in compliance with law, custom or agreement, devolves on such person.

F. 564. G. 960. S. 700.

42.—The ownership of a lost thing does not devolve on the finder. He is bound to inform the owner or the loser of such thing, or to deliver it within three days to a police officer or to any other competent official.

The finder is entitled to claim reimbursement of all reasonable expenses incurred by him for the detection of the loser and for the upkeep of the thing, and to avail himself thereanent of the preferential right for preservation of property described in the Book on Obligations.

If the finder has incurred damages therefrom, he can claim compensation and retain the thing until such compensation is paid to him.

Siam : Dika No. 9/123.

F. Circ. 3 August. 1825. G. 965, 970. I. 715, 717. S. 700, 720. Civil Code, Obligations, s. 324.

Illustrations for Sections 42 to 44. — I. The captain of a ship, in order to prevent her from sinking down during a storm, throws overboard a few scores of casks loaded on deck. One week later, the master of a junk finds these casks floating and picks them up. When he arrives at the next port of call, he must inform of his finding the owner of the casks or, if he cannot detect him, deliver the casks within three days of his arrival to the police or to the harbour or customs officers, or to the administrative head of the place, as the case may be. If the owner is found, he must reimburse to the master of the junk the cost of shipping of his casks from the place of discovery to the harbour.

II. — By the effect of a sudden squall of wind or of an unexpected rise of the water level, A's river boat is torn from the landing stage to which it is made fast and carried away several miles down stream. It runs aground on the estate of B. B must inform A that A's boat has been found on B's estate or, if B cannot detect who is the owner of the boat, he must, within three days from that on which the boat has been found, deliver it to the police or to the administrative head of the place. If B has made advertisements in the papers to detect the owner of the boat, the latter shall reimburse to B the cost of such advertisements.

III. — A tiger attacks a herd belonging to B whilst that herd was grazing in the woods. A's ponies and buffaloes, frightened by the tiger, bolt away and are found by B on his estate situated at a distance of several miles from A's house. B must inform A that A's ponies and buffaloes have been found on B's estate or, if B cannot Illustrations for Sections 42 to 44.—I. The captain of a ship, in order to prevent her from sinking down during a storm, throws overboard a few scores of casks loaded on deck. One week later, the master of a junk finds these casks floating and picks them up. When he arrives at the next port of call, he must inform of his finding the owner of the casks or, if he cannot detect him, deliver the casks within three days of his arrival to the police or to the harbour or customs officers, or to the administrative head of the place, as the case may be. If the owner is found, he must reimburse to the master of the junk the cost of shipping of his casks from the place of discovery to the harbour.

II.—By the effect of a sudden squall of wind or of an unexpected rise of the water level, A's river boat is torn from the landing stage to which it is made fast and carried away several miles down stream. It runs aground on the estate of B. B must inform A that A's boat has been found on B's estate or, if B cannot detect who is the owner of the boat, he must, within three days from that on which the boat has been found, deliver it to the police or to the administrative head of the place. If B has made advertisements in the papers to detect the owner of the boat, the latter shall reimburse to B the cost of such advertisements.

III.—A tiger attacks a herd belonging to B whilst that herd was grazing in the woods. A's ponies and buffaloes, frightened by the tiger, bolt away and are found by B on his estate situated at a distance of several miles from A's house. B must inform A that A's ponies and buffaloes have been found on B's estate or, if B cannot